From the Editor's Desk

Fit no stereotypes. Don't chase the latest management fads. The situation dictates which approach best accomplishes the team's mission.

– Colin Powel

Dear readers,

Welcome to the fresh issue of BIMTECH Business Perspectives (BBP). The journal has initiated a fresh journey from now. It is a journey that we believe put an indelible mark in development and growth of management research publication.

At BBP, we continuously look for scope of improvements. To make the journal more focused, and current, we modified the aims and scope. It will now have special focus on, impact of human behavior on management decisions and influence of emerging technology on managerial process. BP will also prefer a qualitative research and mixed methods approach in answering research questions.

From this year onwards, we are going to launch best paper awards to recognize notable contributions to the journal. Encouraging young researchers is a priority area for BBP. We are also initiating an award for young full time PhD scholars for contributing research papers in the journal.

To enhance the visibility and also to reduce the turnover time, we are introducing the online first from next issue of BBP. Now, we will complete the review process and publish the paper online within 30-45 days of receiving, subject to the acceptance.

A scholarly journal is always peer reviewed. At BBP, all papers are stringently reviewed by a competent and able peer group. To manage an increased inflow of papers, the journal needs a large number of competent reviewers. At BBP, we welcome reviewers' empanelment in all the area of business management.

This issue of BBP carries some very good research papers and a case in the area of business management. We will look for your feedback. Do write to us.
